Capabilities of the Colorado Valley.

From the Yuma Sentinel.

In the great valley of the Colorado, below Yuma, rice, cotton, tobacco and sugar cane will be grown in the rich bottom lands near the river. Just back of these lie the 50,000 acres of wild hemp. Another 50,000 acres can be put into alfalfa, flax, hemp and other fibrous plants. Back of this tract comes the great area of alluvial soil, just adapted to the production of all the citrus and semi-tropical fruits. Sugar beets, the coming bonanza of Yuma, will grow anywhere on these lands, but their native health is south of New River, or what is generally known as Hardy's Colorado. On the tens of millions of live oak will be grafted the chestnut. On the mesquite will be grafted the castor bean and on the Palo Verde will grow the olive. Thousands of acres of these trees only await the coming of the horticulturist. Wheat, barley, corn, beans and melons by the million will grow to perfection, not to mention sweet potatoes, peanuts and vegetables, which can be produced every month in the year.
